LABU 2051 Business Case Analyses I

1. Course Information
LABU 2051 is a two-credit, one semester core course offered in Fall semesters to Year 2 Risk Management and Business Intelligence (RMBI) students in the School of Business and Management. Students attend two hours of class per week. The course aims to develop students' skills in persuasive communication, critical thinking and problem solving, and independent learning, teamwork and leadership through case analyses. Students will read, analyze and discuss business cases, research and apply relevant business concepts and theories, generate and evaluate alternative solutions, and make and justify recommendations. Students will present their case analyses and recommendations to specific audiences by giving oral presentations that focus on voice and delivery, and writing a recommendation report.
